Activity Description

Stop-frame animation with award winning cartoonist

Have you ever secretly wanted to create your own animation but thought you don't have the ability or talent to create anything spectacular?

Comedy writer Harry Venning, also National Strip-Cartoonist of the Year, who has worked with the likes of The Guardian, The Times and Radio 4, will teach your team with his humorous style, how to draw cartoons. He will then lead your team through Animate – where the delegates work together to produce short animation clips.

Teams receive a brief to create a specific, themed animation which requires working collaboratively with other teams. Delegates will have to communicate effectively with individuals in their own teams as well as with the other teams to ensure continuity throughout the final video when all the animations are joined together.

Alternatively, if you'd like a competitive event, teams make an independent movie, competing for the Oscar award. Imagination, communication, planning and coordination are essential to make any film great!

It's a blank canvas, how will you fill yours?

“The Animations event was great success. It was completely different to anything we have done before, challenged people, drove teamwork and creativity, which is exactly what we were hoping for. People that were there are still talking about it. Harry Venning and the team were great, so thank you for making it so great.”

“Really pleased with how organised the team from Blue Hat were on the day - they liaised with the venue, brought and set up their own equipment, and then delivered a fun and engaging Animate activity. I didn't have to do much other than enjoy watching the animations at the end!”
